Yes- Roger has been placed in my care and because I want him to feel like part of the family he can travel out of state with us to Disney World

Incorrect. A legal process has to be followed in order for him to be able to go with you. Otherwise, that is kidnapping.

Yes- As a foster parent I have the right to decide in which activities my child in care can participate

Incorrect. When it comes to out-of-state travel, the biological parent retains the right to approve or deny their child from going on the trip. If they say no, the child must stay, or you can seek the court's permission.

No- Out of State travel decision requires the permission of the biological parent or the court

Correct! You need the biological parent's permission first. If they deny permission, the next option is to get it granted from the court.

No- Normalcy laws state that out of state decisions must be made by Utah Foster care

Incorrect. The decision lies with the biological parent. If they deny permission, the next option is to get it granted from the court.

You plan on taking a trip to your cabin in Wyoming and you want to take Joan, a 14 year old girl who has been placed with your family for the last 8 months. You told your case worker about the trip 3 months ago. The case worker has tried to contact the child's biological parents for the last 11 weeks but she does not know where they are. Will you be able to take Joan with you to Wyoming?

Hint

- Yes - By not being available the biological parent loses their rights.
- Yes - But only if the court grants permission.
- No - Only biological parent can grant permission for Joan to go.
- No - Unless the case worker cannot find respite care.

Incorrect. The biological parent still has rights

Yes - But only if the court grants permission.

Correct! If the biological parent cannot be found, the next option is to seek permission from the court.

No - Only the biological parent can grant permission for Joan to go.

Incorrect. The court can also grant permission for the child to go.

No - Unless the case worker cannot find respite care.

Incorrect. The court can still grant permission. If they don't grant permission, the case worker WILL find respite care for the child.
